Introductory.

WE ARE at a loss to whom we shall address this little book. It is not intended for the public, much less for the critic. Our natural modesty at once disclaims the idea of interesting or startling the world, while we hope that all will realize that it is not meant for a literary performance; but rather as a sort of "what-not" with which we choose to amuse ourselves in the hardest and dullest term of the year. We were about to fall back on the usual resort, and commence with an invocation to the gentle reader; but a careful examination of our subscription list convinced us that we could not conscientiously use the adjective. So we will content ourselves with saying that we hope, that to the class about to leave college, it will be a souvenir of some pleasant memories; to the alumni, a book of some value for reference and to the rest of the world, some evidence supplementary to that of January 4th, of the "visibility" of Hamilton College.

Our hearts are not vain. We are not inclined to boast. But we cannot help feeling that, in the course of time, this book will be sought for by all literary men, and will appear on the shelves of all great libraries. Unborn antiquarians and book collectors will seek for it with enthusiasm, and when successful, exhibit it with pride, as the only book of 1876, written without reference to the Centennial, and with no mention of the boy who never told a lie.

"'Αεὶ ἀριστεύειν."

WE PASS—not in the game of euchre, but in the game of college life. The vague, indefinable feeling that some one else wants our place in chapel, hall or class-room, is creeping over us. Somehow our thoughts begin to wander abroad. There is a world beyond these classic walls. What has it in store for us? We are slipping one by one the cables which hold us in this quiet anchorage, and spreading sail to be wafted into other seas, to feel the impulses of stronger currents.

Like other classes we have had our share of college victories and defeats. We might brag, but we will not. We might deplore, but let the dead past bury its dead.

We love our Alma Mater, not with a love which vents itself in sentimental gush, but with an affection which seeks by earnest endeavor to give her the place which she deserves among American Colleges. There is regret in parting, for in this college home many tender attachments have been formed. But we came to go, and the departure is neither sudden nor unexpected. What Hamilton has done for us let the future tell, her's is the only reliable judgment. Close up the ranks. It is time to march.

Τῷ ὁμονοεῖν κρατοῦμεν.

JUNIOR YEAR—steadiest, hardest, happiest of the four—the red-letter year of college toil and pleasure. Seventy-seven stands as its worthy representative. We lift our hat, most charming reader, and blush with becoming modesty at your congratulations and compliments.

If we were to draw a symbolic picture, expressive of Seventy-seven's junior year, we would have for background a crabbed-looking sheet of Greek derivatives. On the right should be a remarkably spirited and active pony in the act of galloping madly over the pages of a torn and tattered Agamemnon. The left should be ornamented by a formidable package of unpaid bills for Junior Exhibition clothes; and the foreground should be a mixture of "warnings," and cigars and poker checks. Thus would we mingle together the care and trouble, the fun and jollity of junior year.

Our underclassman contests we have resolved to pass unnoticed, many and victorious as they were. Our struggles with the maniacal poetry of poor demented Sophocles, or with the insane chorus of Æschylus, we look back on with a sigh and leave untold. Even our strange, romantic ride to Trenton Falls, so full of incident, so productive of great results—even this, we are restrained by an awful oath from mentioning. Cut off, in this heartless way, from all allusions to both past and present, we turn with prophetic gaze to look into the slowly-dawning future.

Seventy-seven, united in hand and heart, has ever lived in accordance with its motto. As she has "stood together" in the years that have gone, so will she "stand together" in the years that are coming. Every man will remember this sentiment in the future as he has in the past. He will stand in business, together with honesty and wealth; in public life, together with honor and fame; in private life, together with comfort and happiness; in the courts of law, with eloquence and success; in the courts of love with pleadings as eloquent and success as well deserved. May our lives record no tragedies save those of Æschylus and Sophocles; but may they ever sound with plaudits from choruses of admiring friends.

Δνσπόρων οὐδαμῶς ἡσσητέα.

NOTHING would please us more, or, perchance, be more agreeable to the readers of the HAMILTONIAN than a new departure from the usual style of under classmen editorials. Instead of cant phrases and vain-glorious boasting we should be happy to present "something new under the sun," but we have neither the originality nor the self-confidence necessary. The remembrance of the dire fate of those newly initiated pests of the college, who, prompted doubtless by their originality and fresh views of life endeavored to introduce a change in college customs, comprehending not only the idea of a whole class rooming together, but a Freshman Literary Monthly, and, in fact, unquestionable Freshman supremacy, effectually deters us from attempting any innovations.

Our all-important task, which was of course the training up of the verdant Freshmen "in the way in which they should go" may justly be said to have been well done, notwithstanding the disadvantages with which we were obliged to cope. Our wards came under our care child-like and untutored in the extreme. They evidently came to college two years too soon. For persons of such tender age to be so suddenly deprived of a mother's watchful care was much to be deplored and we resolved to do our whole duty. But our homesick and peevish charges failed to perceive the benefit of discipline. They refused to accept the truth of the inspired statement, "He that spareth the rod spoileth the child." Their innocence turned to insolence, and their refractory spirit often necessitated means of punishment which at times may have seemed somewhat harsh. Lest any should think that we were too strenuous in our efforts to enforce the prescribed rules of Freshman conduct, we would most earnestly assert that we were ever animated by a spirit of uncompromising fidelity to duty. In consequence of this fidelity the impudent usurpers of the right to break into Sopohmore rooms were hurled broken-headed down three flights of stairs to their proper sphere. Concerning the studies of the year, thus far, we have little to report. This part of our work sinks into insignificance when compared with the arduous task of fitting for higher walks in life a band of simple rustics puffed up in their own conceit. This task we have endeavored faithfully to perform. If the members of '79 fail to acquit themseves creditably as Sophomores, it will be owing to the pledge with which they in their freshness bound themselves and to no neglect of duty on the part of '78.

"Πρόσμ ἀεί."

THE FRESHMAN Class is now supposed to make a profound bow, gentle reader, and to ask of you a moment's attention. With characteristic modesty, we dislike to tell of our glorious triumphs; and so we shall leave untold many thrilling tales of persecution, and (when forbearance ceased to be a virtue) of swift and terrible vengeance. Suffice it to say that we have shown the Soph.'s that '79 is a class such as "Old Hamilton" has rarely seen; not only is it such numerically, but physically and intellectually. Moreover we have been peculiarly successful in our struggles with all Sophomores. Lest this should seem to be boasting, gentle reader, we think it but right to explain that it is no great source of congratulation, since the strength and mental attainments of the Sophomore Class are so minute as to be estimated only by approximation. But if, during the rest of our college life, we should meet with "foemen more worthy of our steel," we will promise to come off conquerors in the future as in the past.

We have ever displayed great unanimity, whether in the midnight serenade, when we escaped the vigilance of the ferocious "Clinton police," and a small puppy; or in our eager pursuit after the secrets of astronomy, when our muffled tones did not escape the tutored ear of the ——— foreigner; or even in the excitement of "the bolt," when the vision of an irate parent holding in his hand the instrument of torture, rose up before each one of us. In all such trying circumstances as these '79 has never failed to acquit herself nobly.

As we stand now, at the beginning of our college course, we look hopefully into the future. We have a determination fixed and strong, to do all we can to honor the name of Alma Mater, and instead of tarnishing we shall add new lustre to the brightness of her glory. We have now the sympathies of the upperclassmen, and the admiration of the Sophomores; and, when a few years have rolled away, and we, turning at the goal, gaze back upon our completed race, we hope to see the record of '79 with no blot or stain upon it, but standing forth bright and glorious, commanding the respect and admiration of all.

RULES

Governing the Silver Ball Championship.

1. The Silver Ball shall be competed for by the class nines of Hamilton College, and by no other clubs.

2. The captains of the nines shall determine by lot in what order the first and second games shall be played.

3. These two successful nines shall play the third game, and the winning party shall hold the Ball.

4. The Ball shall be won by a single game.

5. Any nine holding the Ball shall be amenable to challenge once in ten days, the first challenge presented having the preference.

6. The nine winning the greatest number of games during the season may, at the end of the season, inscribe upon the Ball the name of their class and the date of their last successful game.

7. The Ball season shall extend from the first of May to the first of November.

8. The Ball shall be kept in the College Library.
